II – Reading Comprehension(practice No.2)

Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions below: (70 Marks)

We, humans have been able to live on this planet for millions of years because there has been an environment that we could live in. This environment with its air and oxygen that we could breath, a temperature that did not kill us, a shelter from the weather, food we could eat, water that we could drink, bacteria that broke down the food in our stomach and so on.

The environment on Earth has changed from time to time, for example, during the Ice Age the Earth became colder. It is possible that such changes lead to the disappearance of some of the animals that humans shared our world with. Originally, humans were not powerful or cleverer enough to affect their environment much. But they learnt various skills to use fire. So they were able to burn down areas of dry grass and trees, and to cultivate the soil, so they were able to turn bushes or even wood land into field. Later, they learnt how to bring water to their land controlling rivers and digging ditches, this made it possible for them to change deserts into green land.

But the more science advanced, the worse the effect of humans on the surface of the earth grew. They cut down large areas of forests for building warship, or for getting wood to cook with, and as result they turned green land into deserts, since trees attract rain, the fewer trees there are, the less rain falls.

Another great danger is from pollution from our chemicals and fuels; like smoke and coal, which fill the atmosphere. The longer we go on using chemicals and producing smoke, the more damage they will do to the layer that protects our world from the sun's radiation.

Radiation from our use of atomic energy also could do disastrous damage to our precious environment.

Glossary:

bush: (noun) a low shrub with many branches.

ditch: (noun) a narrow channel dug in the earth.

warship: (noun) a combat ship.

II – Reading Comprehension(70 Marks)

Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions below:

Making a pilgrimage to Holy Makah is the duty of every Muslim who is in a good state of health and afford to do it. The pilgrims must visit the Holy Ka'aba, at Al-Masjed Al-Haram, and various other sacred places near the Holy Town. This religious visit is supposed to be paid at least once in every Muslim's lifetime, during the annual pilgrimage season.

Those taking part in a pilgrimage come from every corner of the world are required to wear simple robes of pure white material. Whether they are kings or beggars, this makes all the pilgrims equal. The men's clothes ought not to be sewn, but women may wear sewn clothes so long as they are simple and plain, and cover the whole body.

The full ritual of pilgrimage includes a visit to the Holy Ka'aba, encircling it seven times on foot, walking seven times between Safa and Marwa and standing on the plain of Arafat. Of course, this is done in the company of an enormous number of other pilgrims, since about two million Muslims participate in the Hajj every year. After that, pilgrims go to Mina spending their nights there until the day before the Great Feast. They have to spend that day on the plain of Arafat and do not come before sunset. At Muzdalifa, pilgrims collect small stones. They throw stones at the three stones pillars at Mina, just as the prophet Ibrahim stoned the Devil as a sign of his hatred of the Devil.

The main purpose of a pilgrimage is to praise God and seek his mercy. It is actually an annual symbol of living and everlasting faith, and of the unity of Muslims. It is considered to be one of the greatest wonders of the world and to excel any other act done by man.

II – Reading Comprehension (100 Marks) (Practice No.1)

Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions below:

Our world was a lot different just a few decades ago. People spent more time outdoors. But today, video games and hundreds of TV channels often compete with walking in the park or planting a garden. Safety fears, pollution, and limited green spaces in cities also keep many people indoors.

5 Young people now spend about six hours a day in front of a TV or a computer and less than four minutes playing outdoors. That statistic comes from the U.S. Department of the Interior, an agency that manages many of the nation’s parks. Not that technology is bad – but it is not healthy for the mind and the body when time spent on technology replaces outdoor time, says Dr. Daphne Miller, a family doctor who also 10 teaches medicine at the University of California, San Francisco.

Many health experts call the problem of kids not spending enough time outdoors “nature deficit disorder.” Scientific studies support the claims that a nature deficit can harm the mind and the body, and some health experts have started calling green time “vitamin G.” kids who don’t get outdoors much are more likely to have 15 attention-deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) and depression. They also tend to have trouble in school. Doctors believe that is because being outdoors stimulates the mind more than sitting around indoors. Even those who usually spend a lot of time outdoors notice a difference when they don’t get enough green time.

20 Studies by Cornell University environmental psychologist Nancy Wells show that kids who have easy access to nature areas cope with stress better. They adapt faster when they move to a new place, and fight less with family members. The studies also indicate that kids who move to places with more green space do better at school and that spending time outside helps improve symptoms for kids with depression and ADHD.

25 The U.S. government launched the America’s Great Outdoors programmes to help make more outdoor spaces and activities safe and accessible to all. Those programmes are encouraging people to try fun outdoor activities such as hiking and swimming at parks, beaches, forests, and farms. According to America’s Great Outdoors, Americans report better health, greater happiness, and more quality family time when they get more green time.

60 Doctors have started giving their patients a dose of vitamin G. Dr. Miller writes “park prescriptions” for her patients because, she says, “being outdoors is good for your health.” She finds that when she gives patients prescriptions, they tend to accept them willingly. Her prescriptions tell people exactly where to go, how often, and how long to stay active.

II – Reading Comprehension (100 Marks) (Practice No.2)Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions below:

It was on one of the hottest August days – the fourth, and at twelve exactly, for the square clock was striking the hour – that a short, heavily-built woman of about fifty, carrying a shopping bag, came out from the darkness of an old store house where she worked every morning as a checker, and set off a long the narrow grey street to a bus stop. Most of the factories and offices in the town were closed for two weeks but the store house, which held foodstuffs and other goods that did not keep, had remained open during the holidays. The heat, made worse by the heavy smell of petrol from the main street nearby undisturbed by the slightest current of cooler air, enveloped her. She was neither dressed nor built for energetic activity on a hot day, being very short indeed, and fat, so that she had to roll a little in order to get a long. Her tight black dress was worn without a belt or any ornaments other than a large metal necklace but of no special value, which hung on a white ribbon around her neck. Her worn old shoes made loud foot steps in the silence of the empty street of closed buildings. The worn old bag she carried caused her to lean over slightly to her right as she walked, but it was clear that she was used to carrying such heavy weights.

Reaching her usual bus stop, she put down her bag and rested. Then, suddenly conscious of being watched, she turned quickly round and looked sharply upward at the tall man behind her.

He was the only other person waiting, and indeed, at that moment, the only other person in the street. She had never spoken to him, yet his face was already familiar to her, so big, so uncertain, so sweaty. She had seen it yesterday, and the day before, and for all she knew, the day before that as well. For the last three or four days anyway. This great nervous lump of a man, waiting for a bus or hanging about on the foot bath out side the store house, had become a figure of the street for her; and what was more, a figure of certain definite type, though she had yet to put her finger on exactly which type it was. More than once, she had felt his interest in her and she had wondered whether he was a police man.
