It was not until 1930, that people could keep food fresh for a long time. They did freezing it. Mr. Birdseye was the first person to sell frozen food. He had watched fishermen catching fish in the coldest parts of Canada. The fish came out of the water and froze in the cold air. Months later, these frozen fish were still fresh, and fishermen could cook and eat them. Mr. Birdseye started a freezing company. He put fresh vegetables into large boxes of water in a large freezer.

Mr. Birdseye's company made frozen food from various kinds of vegetables. It sold the frozen food in ten different shops in America. At first, the frozen food did not sell very well. Many people did not have anywhere to keep them because they did not have fridges. Also, the price was high. However, when more people had fridges, frozen food became more favoured and people did not have to pay so much for them. By 1933, there were 516 shops selling frozen food. Later, Mr. Birdseye's company started to freeze meat and today there are many companies selling all kinds of frozen food.
