The sense of humour is a unique part of being human, allowing us to find things in astonishing situations that we don't expect. It can also help us be more creative. Comedians and funny writers have been pleasing their audiences for a long time, making them laugh and showing them how wonderful laughter can be.

Humour has always been a part of human history. In the past, people used it to talk about serious things or refer to a certain person in a funny way. Even today, it is used to show points of weakness of the society and make important points.

Humour can take many forms, depending on what makes each person laugh. Some people who enjoy physical comedy always laugh at funny falls or sudden movements. Others like jokes that play with words or use clever words. Satire and irony are types of humour that make fun of things and comment on society. Observational humour finds funny things in everyday life and shows how people can be strange or funny in their behaviour.

Good types of humour are about timing and surprises. Comedians know how to tell jokes at just the right moments to make people laugh the most. They know how to be funny without being cruel or unkind.

The effects of humour are very positive. Laughing has been proven to reduce anxiety, help our bodies stay healthy, and make us feel good. It also helps people be closer to each other and builds friendships. Sometimes, a good joke can make a tense situation more relaxing and help people enjoy their life.

In conclusion, humour is an important part of being human. It brings happiness and helps us see things in a positive way.
