Festivals around the world celebrate different cultures and traditions. They bring people together to enjoy special events. However, every country has its unique festivals, whether for culture or national pride, creating times of happiness and unity.

In some European countries like France and Italy, people celebrate May Day on May 1st to welcome the arrival of spring. During these celebrations, children move around a wooden pole (stick) called a maypole, holding colorful ribbons. As they play, they tie the ribbons around the pole. One girl is usually chosen to lead the game and is called the May Queen.

In Japan, Children's Day is celebrated twice a year: once for girls on March 3rd and once for boys on May 5th. The Doll Festival is celebrated on March 3rd, when girls arrange a traditional set of dolls in their homes. On May 5th, known as Children's Day for boys, families fly carp-shaped models above their rooftops. The carp, a freshwater fish, is used in Japanese festivals because it is known for its strength and energy, representing courage in Japanese culture.

In China, Children's Day is celebrated on June 1st. It is a festive day dedicated to celebrating the well-being and happiness of children. Schools often organise different performances, including music, public activities and theatre. Children enjoy a day off from school or less homework. They also receive gifts and sweets from their parents. It is a cheerful day filled with laughter and excitement across the country.
