-Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions below:

The first time I took my daughter to the cinema she was six and the movie was "Bambi". I'm a movies lover, so I had chosen it carefully and thought a cartoon film would be an effective introduction to the Seventh Art World.

Everything was going just fine until Bambi's mother was shot and killed. My daughter got terrified and asked to go home in the middle of the film. Fortunately later choices turned out OK and she likes films as much as I do.

My point is: are cartoons really safe for children? Or do parents need to pay attention to the type of cartoons that children are watching during their spare time?

Once I sat on the sofa to watch a cartoon with my 8-year-old son and got completely shocked when I realized a cartoon character was in pain right in front of us, bleeding as if it was an action adult movie!

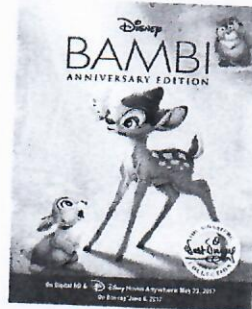

Everybody knows that there are some adult movies that don't spread nice manners or behaviour, but what about other cartoons that are displayed all the day long for young children?

The next time you take a kid to the films maybe a cartoon doesn't make the best choice, unless you take the time to watch it and analyze its content first. Or you take the risk of exposing your child to messages she or he isn't prepared to get yet.
